How is it treated?

The best treatment for postpartum depression is:

- Support from your family and friends
- Individual or group therapy
- Medicine that can be used while breastfeeding (prescribed by your doctor)

What can I do?

Being a good mom means taking care of yourself and your baby. You can take better care of yourself and your baby if you:

- Are honest about how much you can do, and ask other people to help you when you need it
- Find someone to talk to about your feelings
- Talk with your doctor
- Find time to do something for yourself, even if it is only 15 minutes a day
- Get enough rest; sleep when the baby sleeps
- Eat a healthy diet
- Stay active
- Keep a diary of your emotions and feelings

What else should I know?

It is very common for new moms to have the "baby blues." Approximately 80% of new mothers will experience the baby blues within a couple days of giving birth. These feelings usually come and go within the first two weeks after birth and go away without treatment. Typically, feeling sad, tearful, irritable and anxious will not keep you from caring for your baby.

If these symptoms persist longer than 2-3 weeks, you may have postpartum depression. Postpartum depression affects 1 in 8 women.

You have experienced many changes since the arrival of your child – physical, emotional and lifestyle. Experiencing postpartum depression is not your fault and does not mean you are not a good mother. If you are depressed, you need to get help. It will not get better on its own.
